Little more than twenty years will have transpired since the ratification of the US Constitution when its former ruler, Great Britain, would challenge the new nation again. The resolve of Americans seeking their way as a democracy in a world still suffering from a ruler and monarchy mentality, was now to be thoroughly tested. With the US Capitol sacked, and the White House burned, and British victory almost certain, the Stars and Stripes anthem was born. Heroes like Andrew Jackson were made in the Battle of New Orleans. America learned it was a country capable of self-defense. The unique American ideals of growth and expansion led to the Louisiana Purchase, and the Lewis and Clarke Expedition, giving way to the dream of a country spanning the shores of the Atlantic to the Pacific. Through their decisions and actions, US Presidents Jefferson, Adams, Madison, secure the vision of the two documents which forged the fledgling republic; the Declaration of Independence and US Constitution. How would a new and developing nation grow such a dream as introduced by an American Revolution, Declaration of Independence, and US Constitution? Read from the words of those who lived it, in this fifth book from PowerThink Publishing's Original Source Series, Westward Expansion and the War of 1812, Volume 5.
