About the Book: Cherrelle Elliot has been betrayed by both family and friends. On the day of her wedding, her fiancé jilts her at the altar and marries her first cousin. She is devastated to find that her family members have accepted the relationship without regard to her feelings, especially when she witnesses her ex-fiancé, cousin, and their new child being admired at the family reunion. Her grief and embarrassment cause her to leave her home city of New Orleans and move to Houston. After years away from New Orleans, Cherrelle's grandmother asks her to chair the family reunion committee, and at first she refuses. Reassigned to New Orleans to work on a new project for her company, she is forced to take a matured look at her family, and Cherrelle realizes that some things have changed. Her grandmother is in the early stages of Alzheimer's, her sister is being abused by her husband, and her fiancé seems so unhappy. Cherrelle goes back home to New Orleans for a year on business and ends up being in charge of the family reunion. She only does it because of her grandmother's Alzheimer's disease. She hasn't seen many of them in years. Now she's returning with a new attitude and personal success. The only things that make life in New Orleans bearable are the foods that remind her of the love of her family and an unexpected reunion with Cory, a childhood friend she secretly had a crush on.
