The White Man's Burden, a Satirical Forecast (Classic Reprint) T. Shirby Hodge

The White Man s Burden CHAPTER I BEWILDERMENT I COULD not make out at all what had happened to me. Here I was, not a solitary living thing in sight, plodding along under a scorching sun, in a region entirely unknown to me. The landscape, the vegetation, the air itself seemed strange, and I stopped a while, notwithstanding the heat and the lack of shelter, to look about me, collect my wits, and try to make out where I was, and how I came to be there. A cursory survey of my surroundings showed that I was on a broad plain, extending behind me as far as I could see. I must have traveled over this level ground for many miles to reach the place where I was standing. To the left I could just make out a blue streak along the horizon, which I thought might be distant hills, or perhaps water, a lake, or it might be, the sea.
